Why does the court require this information?

The amount of income and expenses of each party is significant in a dissolution of marriage proceeding for several reasons. First, if there are unemancipated children born of the marriage, the court must determine the amount of child support to be paid by one party to the other party. Missouri Supreme Court Rule 88.01 and Form 14 provide the basis for the calculation of a presumed amount of support. The amounts you enter on this "Statement of Income and Expenses" may be used by the court in calculating the amount of child support.

Second, the amounts entered on this “Statement of Income and Expenses” may be used by the court in determining whether one party is entitled to maintenance. Maintenance is spousal support paid by one party to the other. Maintenance was formerly called alimony. If a party does not receive maintenance at the time of dissolution, and the judgment is not subject to modification, the party cannot come back to court to request maintenance in the future. A party may be entitled to maintenance if the party lacks sufficient property to provide for his or her reasonable needs or if the party is unable to support him or herself through appropriate employment. See RSMo. §452.335.

Third, income and expense amounts may be used by the court in determining the amount of attorney’s fees to be awarded a party. The court has the power to order one party to pay the other party’s attorney’s fees. RSMo. §452.355.

If you cannot accurately estimate the income and expenses of your spouse, there are methods available to discover exactly how much your spouse earns and spends. These methods are usually beyond the ability of non-lawyers, and it is strongly suggested that if you do not have an accurate estimate of how much your spouse earns and spends, and these issues would be relevant to your case, then you should contact a lawyer to assist you.

The court may require you to file a more complete “Statement of Income and Expenses”. This would include a more detailed analysis of income and expenses.

Please type or print clearly in black ink. A copy of this form MUST be sent to your spouse. The information in this form is open to the public.
 All pleadings that you file with the court are required to contain the case number and division number (if applicable). Failure to include the case number on your pleading may cause your pleading to be filed in the wrong case. If your case has not yet been filed, then you do not have to enter the cause number on this form.

You must fill in all blanks for Husband and Wife with an amount even if the amount is zero.
